- 1. In the Chinese Communist Army the basic operational unit is the division. Some aspects of its composition and organization, as seen in the harfield Army in the Korean campaign, are described below.
- 2. The headquarters has four departments: Staff, Political, Supply and Medical.
- 3. The Staff Department has six sections: Operations, Intelligence, Deployment (成列)1, Confidential Matters (撰身) (sic) and Administration.
- 4. The Political Department has five sections: Organization, Propaganda, Direct Activities, Security and Administration.
- The Supply Department has five sections: Finance, Pay, Rations and Fodder, Weapons and Administration.
- 6. The Medical Department is known to have two sections dealing with convalescent homes and field hospitals respectively; and it presumably has other sections for its other responsibilities.
- 7. Among the divisional troops normally found in well-equipped formations are the following units:
 - a. A rocket launcher regiment equipped with launchers of Soviet manufacture. There are nine of these per battery, but the humber of batteries in a regiment is uncertain.
 - b. A service battalion responsible for the communications, maintenance and transport of the whole division. This unit has four companies, one for each infantry regiment in the division and one for division headquarters and divisional troops.
 - c. A guard battalion responsible for the protection of battalion headquarters. 25X1A
 - 1. Comment. Probably training.
